Oranges.

I LIKE ORANGES AND I'M INCLUDING A PERIOD IN THE TITLE
BECAUSE I WANT TO, MRS. FREITAG

THE WONDERS OF ORANGES

BY APRIL SCHNOEBELEN

Oranges are tart fruits that grow in warm climates, such as California and Florida. On top of that, there are multiple different kinds of oranges, such as blood oranges, navel oranges, and more.

Mandarins, which are close relatives to oranges, also have multiple variants. This doesn't make them anymore interesting in the author's opinion. The author didn't even want to write this article, but due to laws and being forced to follow a teacher's instructions, the author is, painfully, making an article about oranges.

"School oranges are really bad for some reason."

To the author, school oranges really suck. Like, really, really suck.

But some people disagree. The author went around and found someone to interview about this terrible, orange tragedy. Here's what she had to say.

Rylie Kelley, an 8th grader at South East Junior High, has her own opinions about oranges and if they're good or bad. "I do not like oranges. There's a reason for this," After asking why she didn't like oranges, she responded with, "My dad made this orange Julius drink. It was so disgusting that I threw up."

The author felt bad for Rylie and her disgust for oranges. She also disagreed with Rylie and gave her a weird look.

Next, the author broke the fourth wall and interviewed herself about oranges. Here's what she had to say.

"I happen to like oranges. I always have. Tremendous. Absolutely delicious. Huge." After intimidating the current president of the United States, she gave herself a real answer.

"The school oranges really suck, I'll be honest. It's really disappointing, because I never thought there really could be a bad orange." The author looked thoughtfully at something and then continued. "I was wrong. Never before have I been so infuriated and insulted by an orange. The school oranges are so sour, not even the littlest bit sweet."

After ranting for awhile to herself about oranges, she finally tired herself out and ended up taking a nap. She woke up later and forgot all about oranges.

A pointless opinion about oranges. A pointless article about oranges. Is this what the world has come to? Creating clickbait titles, just so people will read the stuff someone writes out of their own free time? Perhaps the world is coming to an end Perhaps it isn't. Oranges.

Haiku of the day:

Oranges are quite orange
Raspberries are quite rosy
Articles aren't great
